What more needs to be said than has not already been said - the bullion banks organized another raid on the metal at precisely the same point where they had been capping prior to last week's breakout, namely the $1,130 region.

There was really no particular reason that I could see for a sell off of such ferocity. Price will need to stay above the today's session low to avoid moving down towards the next level of support shown on the chart near the $1,090 region.

Resistance once again is the $1,130 region
